Unit 2 – Reflection:

As I sit down to reflect on the events of the past week, I can't help but feel proud of myself for the sheer amount of work that I was able to accomplish. My days were filled with hours of poring over the required readings for units 2 and 3, trying to understand and absorb as much information as possible about Threat Modelling. Threat Modelling was a topic that I struggled with in the past, but I was determined to understand it and become an expert in it. Additionally, with the upcoming assignment to prepare for, I knew I had to push myself harder to succeed.

I needed to understand the topic of threat modelling from this week to prepare for the assignment. The assignment focused on risk identification reports, a topic that I always neglected to take seriously as an IT professional. This unit of study showed me how wrong I was to ignore it since this is one of the crucial topics in today's era of digitalisation and enormous cybersecurity risks. I encounter these risks every day in my work. However, the more I read and researched, the more interested I became in the subject matter. I found myself spending a considerable amount of time taking notes and delving deeper into the concepts and theories behind security assessments.

Despite the challenges, I am proud of myself for my hard work and dedication to expanding my knowledge and understanding of this field. It was a challenging week, but I feel like I came out of it with a deeper appreciation for my work and a renewed sense of curiosity and passion for the subject matter.
